Why Volunteer at MCCU?

With so many organizations in the world today that need and thrive on volunteerism, anyone who thinks about giving of her or his time certainly asks themselves, "Why would I do this?" There are many answers to this question and they vary as to the type of organization, service and commitment required for each. But there are some reasons that cover almost all volunteer opportunities. They include believing in a cause, the opportunity to develop new skills, giving back to a community, working with people you like, keeping your mind active, feeling needed and wanted, etc.

No matter what drives your desire to volunteer, you need to make sure that there is a certain match between you and the organization for which you wish to volunteer. If these include working with a not-for-profit organization that is a true financial cooperative, then you should give serious consideration to getting involved at any of the several levels of participation available at MountainCrest Credit Union.

In today's world of big versus small, profit versus sharing, the collective people-helping-people environment in which MCCU operates is a perfect fit, especially for those who feel that a cooperative operating environment is better than a large corporate one. That's just what the tenets of MountainCrest Credit Union espouse. Look at the Guiding Principles of the credit union along with its Mission:

Operating Principles

- Work with Integrity.
- Treat members, Board, Supervisory Committee and staff with respect.
- Make sound business decisions but with concern for individual needs.
- Deliver on promises.
- Be engaged and responsible for your own actions.
- Support the credit union movement philosophy.
- Smile and have fun.

Mission Statement

Your home for trusted financial services

If you feel as though these are ideals that you can help make into reality, then serving as a volunteer within the governance structure of MountainCrest Credit Union is right up your alley.
